‘Stricter emissions rules to hit car sales’

The changes will require car-makers to cut emissions about 13% to 11.3 grams a kilometre.

The emissions curbs are critical for India's push to tackle some of the world's worst air pollution, which costs the country 8.5% of its gross domestic product, according to the World Bank.

By 2025, India will have up to 20 million old vehicles nearing the end of their lives, causing huge environmental damage, according to the Centre for Science and Environment.

However, the changes come at a tough time for the auto industry, which was just beginning to recover from its worst-ever slowdown before the Covid outbreak again dented demand.

Passenger vehicle sales fell 2% and overall production declined 14% in the year ended March 2021, according to the latest figures from the Society of India Automobile Manufacturers. Automakers are also grappling with a semiconductor shortage and higher raw material costs as commodity prices surge.

Govt in talks to buy 50 m doses of Pfizer vaccine

Experts have said that large-scale vaccination is India's best bet against the fast-spreading Delta variant of the coronavirus. The country has fully vaccinated more than 115 million people, which is about 12% of its estimated 944 million adults, according to latest government data. The government aims to vaccinate the entire adult population by December.

Authorities are also in an advanced stage of negotiations with Johnson & Johnson, which has a deal with India-based Biological E. Ltd, to manufacture as many as 600 million doses, starting as soon as this month, the Journal reported.

Last week, the country approved J&J's one-shot vaccine for emergency use, adding to the vaccines from AstraZeneca, Bharat Biotech, Russia's Gamaleya Institute and Moderna that have been granted such approval.

Regulatory fury: Chinese tech firms decide to 'self-correct'

KE said in a statement to Reuters that any business adjustments on its part "were in compliance with government regulations and aimed at providing better services."

So-called 'self-correction' is promising to become a major corporate trend as the government tears into regulatory norms to promote socialist values and rein in what critics have called reckless capitalist expansion. The term is increasingly used by state media and is similar in tone to 'self-criticism' – a practice encouraged by China's Communist Party.

One of the most high-profile examples has been Tencent Holdings' decision this month to introduce new limits on kids' time spent on 'Honor of Kings', its most popular video game. That came just hours after its shares were battered by a state media article which described online games as "spiritual opium".

"Everyone is trying to get a clear read on the new normal and is resetting as fast as possible," said Jeffery Towson, host of the Asia Tech Strategy podcast and former professor of investment at Peking University.

"Nobody is doing 'move fast and break things' anymore. Nobody is using their market power too aggressively. Everyone is aligning their strategies more closely with the government's priorities," he said.

While Chinese regulators have clamped down on a range of sectors from property to cryptocurrencies to private tutoring, the tech sector has come in for some of the harshest measures to date.
